Removing the barriers to contraceptive choice in India? It took a partnership between EngenderHealth, state governments, and you. And the results are truly impressive.

Dear Friend,

Throughout the COVID pandemic, EngenderHealth has remained committed to strengthening existing health systems and community mechanisms to provide high-quality services that are integrated from the client’s perspective.

EngenderHealth’s Family Planning by Choice project in Ethiopia, the Scaling-up Family Planning project in Tanzania, and the A’Ago project in Ethiopia are the best examples of our integrated approach. These projects integrate contraception, abortion/postabortion care, cervical cancer screening and treatment, adolescent and youth sexual and reproductive health, and maternal health programming. It is through projects like these that women like Tesfanesh in Ethiopia (who is featured in this newsletter) can take control of their lives by determining the timing and number of children they want.

In India, the COVID pandemic has taken a tremendous toll on the population, including our staff. Despite this challenge, EngenderHealth’s EAISI (Expanding Access to Intrauterine Device Services in India) project helped train thousands of healthcare providers in IUD insertion techniques and provision of other contraceptive methods, increasing access and options for women and their families. Although the project has ended, its success will continue through the increased skills of the EngenderHealth-trained healthcare providers and the improved follow-up and mentoring systems within local governments.

Institutional partners like those who funded the EAISI and A’Ago projects provide the critical infrastructure needed to sustain our programs. However, it is individual contributions that enable the flexibility needed to respond quickly in times of crisis — like equipping our staff to protect themselves and clients during the pandemic so they can continue to help those who need our expertise and services. Such support will continue to be important to meet the challenges of COVID, which are even more pronounced in the countries where we work.

Your continued support and generosity are making all the difference.

Thank you!

The success of the recently completed project, Expanding Access to Intrauterine Device Services in India (EAISI), demonstrates just how much can be accomplished when there’s true partnership and planning.

Consider this: In just six years and working in only two Indian states — Rajasthan and Gujarat — the EAISI partnership made it possible for nearly a half-million women to gain control over their reproductive lives by electing to use intrauterine devices (IUDs).

It was the result of a carefully planned, multifaceted project involving training of healthcare professionals, providing women with information on IUDs, and making sure the devices were available when requested.

Over the course of the program, 359 facilities participated, 2,793 professionals learned best practices for delivering IUD services, and 802 providers became effective and knowledgeable family planning counselors.

The training took place “on the ground” in the facilities where services would be provided. Counselors learned how to help a client assess her personal needs and lifestyle so her chosen contraceptive solution — whether an IUD or another available method — would be workable and appropriate for her needs.

Even after the formal conclusion of the project, the success continues as healthcare providers apply what they learned and teach their colleagues and peers. Your support is creating a ripple effect that will spread outward, saving and changing lives for months to come.

Thank you!
WITH YOUR SUPPORT

Tesfanesh and Her Family Look Forward to a Better Life

Without access to family planning information, Tesfanesh, 35, gave birth to seven children. Unable to adequately feed the children she has, Tesfanesh dreaded the possibility of giving birth to more. You stepped up to help her.

“What could be more painful for a mother?” asks Tesfanesh as she recalls her daily struggle to provide enough food for her children. Displaced from their home by conflict in the Guji zone of Ethiopia, she and her husband tried their best, but it was nearly impossible to provide the children with an adequate diet. Two children had already been diagnosed with malnutrition.

Another child? It scared Tesfanesh to even think about it. Her last child was born prematurely, her own health had suffered, and the children she had were already hungry.

But now, through the A’ago project implemented by EngenderHealth and our partners, Tesfanesh can focus on taking care of the family she has. By training health workers to provide contraceptive services, women like Tesfanesh can now get information and referrals for care. Now she has a contraceptive method of her choice—and she no longer worries about unwanted pregnancy.

It has already changed her life. Freed from the stress of an unplanned pregnancy, she obtained a job with a local coffee processing and exporting association. With the added income, her children have more nutritious food—and the possibility of a healthier future.

“I am a living witness,” she says. “There are many women like me [who want] to avoid multiple unplanned pregnancies.”

Working and giving together, we are changing their lives for the better every day.

LOOKING FORWARD — Displaced from their home by conflict, Tesfanesh’s family was often hungry. Freed from worry over an unplanned pregnancy, she now has a job to supplement her husband’s earnings.
